NPRI unveils new blog: Write on Nevada

The Nevada Policy Research Institute today announced the launch of its new blog, Write on Nevada, which is located at the web address writeonnevada.com. The new blog features NPRI's research, commentary, policy analysis and humor regarding the major issues facing the Silver State.

“Write on Nevada won’t just be about the written word,” said Andy Matthews, NPRI's vice president for communications. “Visitors will find videos, images and, soon, podcasts, as part of our efforts to advance the case for free-market principles and individual liberty in the Silver State. We urge anyone interested in Nevada public policy to visit the site, give us feedback, sign up for our RSS feeds and spread the word about this new resource.

“At a time when our state is facing significant and mounting challenges, we at NPRI are proud to do our part to help steer Nevada public policy in a prudent, responsible direction,” Matthews added. “We hope and trust that our new blog will serve as a welcome and valuable contribution to the ongoing public policy debate.”

Write on Nevada also features a complete archive of posts from the Institute’s old blog.
